been made good the same day by a loan of the bank to Morse of $211,000. Wire admitted that this loan of $211,000 was not entered on the books until after 4 o'clock, whereas the bank was supposed to close at 3 o'clock. Replying to Wallace MacFarlane, who personal counsel to Morse, Wire said it frequently happened before that Morse's balance was squared after banking hours.

Former Judge W. M. K. Olcott, who is defending Curtis, asked Wire a series of questions which tended to emphasize the growing belief that the two wings of the defense are getting farther apart. Lawyers at Odds.

Mr. Olcott asked if H. F. Havemeyer, a director, had obtained a loan on the of the campaign to-day with a speech out as improper.

Stimson also showed that is the way from the profits of which had been paid to the bank. Stimson also showed that is the way he has brought on prosperity every time, and I hope the same method will be continued."

This seemed to make a great hit with the crowd. Mr. Taft repeated it in his sentences.

"No."
Q. Did you have any hand in making a loan of $211,000 to Morse on behalf of the bank? A. No.
Q. Did you see Morse and Curtis come from the vault late on Oct. 16?
A. Yes. They came upstairs accompanied by an attendant from the vaults. This attendant carried two safe deposit boxes. THE BOXES WERE OPENED AND SUBSEQUENTLY I SAW IN THE LOAN DEPARTMENT CERTAIN SECURITIES WHICH HAD BEEN TAKEN FROM THESE BOXES. SUBSEQUENTLY I FOUND THESE SUBSEQUENTLY I FOUND THESE SECURITIES RECORDED AS HAVING BEEN DEPOSITED AS COLATTERAL FOR THE LOAN OF $211,000 TO MORSE.

Trust Company, New York Kinckerbocker Real Estate Company and Fourth National Bank.

The prosecution demonstrated to the jury by inference that the grand total of $701.140 of Morse's ostensible security would never have fetched anything like that figure in ordinary times, let alone a time when the plug had been pulled out of the bottom of the market and really valuable stocks were going down out of sight.
